This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world’s books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that’s often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book’s long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

+ Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.

+ Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google’s system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.

+ Maintain attribution The Google “watermark” you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.

+ Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can’t offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book’s appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google’s mission is to organize the world’s information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world’s books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. Secondly, the monumental brasses. Of these but very few remain in the two northern counties, that of Roger Thornton and his wife Agnes, in All Saints' Church, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, being the finest. Durham Cathedral has been robbed of every example; but many matrices remain there, as they do in many of the churches, and testify that the northern counties once contained a large number of these beautiful memorials. The third class may include all the varying forms of the humbler kind of monuments, viz., the semi-effigies, the incised effigies, the coped or ridged, and the flat grave covers, the ornamented stone coffin-lids, and the small headstone crosses. The semi-effigy is a stone slab having a portion of a figure sculptured (as, for instance, the head and feet), while the remainder of the surface of the slab is covered with ornament, incised or in relief. It is, therefore, a compromise between a completely sculptured effigy and an incised slab, and, though not uncommon in other parts of England, I have as yet met with but two examples of this curious form of monument in the two northern counties, one being in St. Nicholas's Church, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, which is evidently to the memory of a mason. It bears a large and florid cross, on the sinister side of which is a sword, and on the dexter side a mason's axe and a mallet; the head is contained in a deeply sunk quatrefoil, while the feet appear in the richly cusped foot of the cross. The other is in the grave-yard of Durham Cathedral, and is, unfortunately, in an advanced state of decay. So also of the incised effigy. I am only aware of two examples in the district: one at Cambo, in excellent preservation, probably represents a civilian, and has no inscription; the other lies on the floor of the chantry chapel on the north side of St. Peter's Church, Bywell. It is so much worn that only a few lines of the figure and a few letters of a "black-letter" inscription are visible. Of the less costly class of monuments, grave covers, and headstone crosses, our two most northerly counties contain a very large number, many of them displaying designs of such intricacy and delicacy that they may fairly be considered worthy to take a high rank as specimens of mediæval art. In addition to their artistic value they possess a special interest as giving us an insight into the domestic manners and customs of the period, as in many instances various persons have their rank or trade indicated on their gravestones, by some symbol or device connected with their position or occupation during life. These sculptures are very various and, are, doubtless, accurate representations of the forms of the objects and tools then in use. Inscriptions were the exception for about the first 250 years after the Conquest, their place being supplied in some measure by these symbols, a sword being used to denote a male; a pair of shears, and sometimes a key, a female; a chalice, sometimes accompanied by a paten with 'The Host' and the hand in benediction, or a book, for a priest; a hammer and a pair of tongs for a blacksmith; a bow for an archer; a hunting horn for a forester; a fleshing knife for a butcher; a shepherd's crook for a shepherd, &c. Shields, charged with arms, are sometimes met with in addition to other objects; they occur at Bywell, Chollerton, Cockfield, Haltwhistle, and Shaftoe. That the smaller slabs do not necessarily indicate the graves of children is shown by the small but very beautiful example at St. Oswald's, Durham, bearing a chalice in relief. The variety of forms that the cross assumes on these memorials is very surprising; out of upwards of 700 examples in Northumberland and Durham no two are exactly alike, and the cross in one of its many forms appears on nearly the whole of them. Of the small headstone crosses we have not many examples; they occur at Corbridge, Chollerton, Great Stainton, Monkwearmouth, and Woodhorn.

It is to illustrate in a complete manner these interesting sepulchral memorials of a bygone age that the publication of these volumes has been undertaken, and I trust they will meet with the approval of the archaeological world. At present I confine myself to the humbler class of monuments, the sepulchral slabs, grave-covers, &c.; but I hope in time to illustrate, in a worthy manner and on a large scale, the sculptured monumental effigies and brasses in Northumberland and Durham. Such a work would, however, be a serious undertaking, and necessarily costly; I have, therefore, in the mean time, decided to publish a series of plates illustrating the whole of the sepulchral slabs, &c., in the same area, and in the letterpress accompanying them to make mention of the effigies, brasses, churchyard crosses, and other objects of peculiar interest in or about the churches I may visit.
Owing to the small extent topography was
